

Certificate Program in Public Health (Master of Public Health) in Department of Community and Family Medicine

The certificate program is designed to provide medical, Dental and pharmacy students and graduate physicians, dentists, pharmacists and public health workforce, educators and other professionals, with a comprehensive understanding about core knowledge area of public health.

Those enrolled in the Certificate Program complete the public health courses listed below. Upon successful completion of these courses (30 credit hours), participants will receive a Certificate in Public Health (MPH).

Courses:

MPH101: Principles of Epidemiology

MPH 102: Biostatistics and Computer Applications

MPH 103: Health system management

MPH 201: Health Economy

MPH 202: Environmental Health

MPH 203: Occupational Health

MPH 204: Quantitative research method

MPH 301: Qualitative Research Method

MPH 302: Ethics in research

MPH 303: Ethics in public health

MPH 304: Evidence based decision making

MPH 305: Social Determinants of Health

MPH 401: Public Health and Behavioral Sciences

MPH 402: Public Health Policy and Administration

MPH 403: Disease epidemiology

Summary of Certificate Program Objectives

Gain a comprehensive understanding about what public health is and how it functions;

Understand and apply the essentials of public health and its population-based approaches;

Learn about the core knowledge area of public health;

Learn about public health ethics and professionalism while working in local, national and international settings.

Benefits of a certificate in Public Health

- Receive a certificate in public health and transcript from an accredited public health program;
- Learn how to apply knowledge and skills to your current or future work in local, national and global health;
- An opportunity for customized mentorship by recognized public health faculty;
- Tabriz University's Public Health Program faculty will provide letters of recommendation upon request;